FENCE BOOKS, Canada, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Laura Sims is a startlingly original poet whose work goes very deep, like a well made of animal and human bones mortared together with rubber tires, dismembered books, dismembered dolls, and a lot of other unlikely stuff that draws water from thousands of feet under the surface of the earth. --Peter Straub I don t know the exact method or intent behind the poems of Laura Sims s My god is this a man, but I know how they feel: harrowing, probing, troubling, surprising, and often gorgeous. It s as if Stein and Dickinson had been invited to converse about the effects of serial murder on body, soul, and mind: a strange wonder. The phenomenological and moral turbulence of these poems is matched by their sonic and structural grace, making Sims s book a profound offering to ongoing, important conversations about the nexus of aesthetics, violence, representation, and empathy. --Maggie Nelson In this minimalist account of the language of killers, Laura Sims creates disturbingly powerful chords of empathy. Reading, we discover ourselves inside the one who begs, For heaven s / sake catch me /before I kill more. Like a photographic negative the book shows only the barest lines of its subjects, but in so doing reveals more, and more hauntingly, than full exposure ever can. We don t want to turn the page, and we do. Looking away is not an option, because we are seduced. --Julie Carr Laura Sims s third poetry collection engages the escarpment of the page itself: walled-off phrases set against spare lines on largely empty pages, a proto-graphical representation of thought itself. These poems replicate the psychic fragmentation that s necessary for evil-doing: relationship as crime scene, the folk ballad re-writ..
