English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .An excerpt from the beginning of the Introduction: If we are content to accept Oscar Wilde at his own final valuation and to judge him by the confession which he has left the world in De Profundis, we can apply to him no better epithet than The Epicurean. But confessions are at best misleading. They are tintured by the exaggerations of humility. They are laden with self-abasement proportionate to the penitent's desire for absolution, rather than to the culpability of the malefactor. They confuse things material with things spiritual and the sins of the body with those of the intellect. Fearful of half-truths, they disclose monstrous untruths, until the spirit of self-immolation is glutted and the tortured soul satisfied that repentance has no further penance within reach. So, with Wilde, it is difficult to believe the whole of the pitiless indictment which he brings against himself. Flaneur and dandy he accuses himself of being. Flaneur and dandy he may have been. But, however profitless his life, must his word be wholly without purpose? Surely there was something...
