Adorno, philosopher, cultural critic, sociologist & music theorist, was one of the most important German intellectuals of the 20th century. This concise, readable life is the 1st attempt to look at his philosophical & literary work in its essential political context. Central to Adorno's intellectual development were his musical training, his father's Jewish roots, & the rise of National Socialism in Germany, which forced him to emigrate to the United States. While in exile, he & Max Horkheimer wrote "Dialectic of Enlightenment", a bold attempt to illuminate the dark side of modernity, & on his own Adorno wrote a series of connected essays on the "culture industry", his indictment of mass culture. A co-founder of the famous Frankfurt School, Adorno returned to head it after the war, assuming a key role in the intellectual life of postwar West Germany until his untimely death in 1969. Jäger's biography sheds new light on many aspects of Adorno's life & writings & on his relationships w/ such figures as Paul Celan, Bertolt Brecht & Walter Benjamin. * "Jäger's style & ability to see the big picture through the details works wonders: [he has written] a philosophical book as suspenseful as a mystery: an incredible achievement." - Süddeutsche Zeitung.
