Dementia is a group of neurological conditions that lead to gradual decline in mental function. It is the most common reason for entry into long-term care settings such as nursing homes and residential care-assisted living. The majority of care for people with dementia is provided in the community by family members; however, increasing care needs in later stages of the illness often lead to placement in a long-term care setting. Because long-term care settings are highly varied, people with dementia and their families would benefit from evidence-based guidance on what to choose from the available options. Dementia is a syndrome with multiple causes characterized by a decline in mental function, marked most commonly by memory impairment and a reduction in at least one other area of cognitive function, such as reasoning, judgment, abstract thought, comprehension, learning, task execution, and use of language. The most common type of dementia is Alzheimers disease; other types include vascular dementia, mixed dementia, dementia with Lewy bodies, and frontotemporal dementia. Dementia causes significant morbidity and mortality and creates a substantial burden on the people affected, as well as on caregivers, health systems, and society. Dementia gradually erodes the individuals ability to make decisions; manage personal affairs; and eventually do even simple tasks. Late stages of dementia are characterized by weight loss, limited mobility, and frequent infections so that, unless some other illness is fatal sooner, dementia will lead to death. The course of dementia from diagnosis to death is variable but typically 8 to 12 years. Costs of dementia care, including both medical care and informal caregiver time, are estimated at more than 148 billion in the U. S annually. One relevant question...
